Heating, Cooling & Ventilation: Sustainable technologies for a better life

Marco Centurioni
Graduate student, Bocconi
University, Milan

Marco Centurioni was born in Verona, Italy on 6 November 1993. After completing the IB program at the International School of Verona, he moved to Milan for his Bachelor in International Economics at the Bocconi University, which included a semester at the Economic Engineering department of the Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile, in Santiago del Chile.

In March 2018 he will receive his Master's in Public Policy and Public Management, from the Bocconi University. After working in a social entrepreneurship consultancy in Milan and spending six months working at the Education department of the OECD in Paris, he moved to Brussels where he is now working in the Public Affairs division of Grayling. At Grayling, he is part of the Energy and Environment practice, following upon the developments of the Circular Economy Package and the Clean Energy for all Europeans Package.
